Platforms for Free Conference Calls
Effective February 16, 2018

Google Hangout

You can use it on any device that has either video or audio support, and the quality of calls is noteworthy. You can organize your contacts for quick calls, you can also live-stream your conferences as well.

Skype

It might not be the most secure program in terms of government policies, but it certainly has its appeal when it comes to free video calls, free voice calls, and free instant messaging. You can easily create a video call that consists of up to 25 people, see the official group calls page for more details.

FreeBridge

FreeBridge is a free conferencing platform that can host conference calls of up to 100+ people. FreeBridge is used to conduct board meetings, legal depositions, sales or training seminars.

Rehuddle

Rehuddle you must create a group name, you can then dial the given number and enter the extension that was given to you. Same applies for everyone else who wants to join the call.

Free Conference Calling

You can create calls that consist of up to a 1,000 people, but the most interesting feature is that you can get detailed reports of your conference calls in the account dashboard. Statistics are always great, especially if you must monitor attendance.

OpenVoice

OpenVoice will allow you to build open call groups for up to 500 people, not only is it easy to use, OpenVoice also provides statistic reports, and features that allow to create specific call groups. If you're always travelling or on the go, you'll be happy to learn that OpenVoice has a mobile app as well.
